The first part of the document discusses the importance of maintaining accurate records of all transactions. It emphasizes that every entry should be supported by a valid receipt or invoice. This not only helps in tracking expenses but also ensures compliance with tax regulations.

In the second section, the author provides a detailed breakdown of the monthly budget. It includes categories for housing, utilities, food, and entertainment. Each category is further divided into specific items, such as rent, electricity, groceries, and dining out. This level of detail allows for a clear understanding of where the money is being spent.

The third part of the document focuses on the overall financial health of the household. It compares the current month's spending to the previous month and to the budgeted amounts. Any variances are noted and explained, such as an increase in utility costs due to a change in season or a decrease in food expenses due to a change in eating habits.

Finally, the document concludes with a summary of the key findings and recommendations. It suggests ways to optimize spending, such as negotiating better rates for services or finding alternative providers. The author also notes that while the budget is a useful tool, it should be reviewed and adjusted as needed to reflect changes in circumstances.

You Can't Nutshell America and Other Ramblings

I took two exams today. Physics and American history. Afterwards, I walked around the school once, looking closely at the faces, thinking of the impending three month's exile from those faces, wondering if that was good or bad, just keeping my mind off the tests. When I finally got home I sure didn't feel like studying for the next exam, so I left for the library. I was driving through the center of town, noticing a sign announcing a new health food store opening on the corner, contemplating for a handful of seconds fads and exploitation and gullibility, when I got a red light at one of the stoplights the Village installed a year or two ago when they spent jillions of dollars for stoplights and stopsigns on every corner in town that doesn't need them and even on a few that do need them. This corner needed it. But whether it needed it in this setup is one hell of a question for people who earn doctorates in traffic engineering instead of growing sideburns. It's a weird intersection. The main road has a sidestreet branching in each direction, but about twenty yards apart. If the light turns red and you're in the twenty yard section between the white painted line on the road and the red light, you don't know what the hell to do. Some people go through the light, some just sit there, some even back up behind the line. I've seen a cop go through the light; only thing redder than the light was his face, staring straight ahead as if he didn't realize his guilt. And he sure couldn't have consulted the damn traffic engineer.

Anyway, I got the red light, so I stopped behind the white line, no cars in front of me except those that got through before the light, a couple cars behind me. The AM radio on, can't remember the song—half of them sound alike anyway. I looked out, around, mostly straight ahead. An elderly man, somewhat overweight in baggy pants and plaid shirt partly concealed in an orange plastic contraption for crossing guards, led two little girls across the road. By the time he got to the other side they were ten yards ahead of him. He meant well. And I watched, wearing faded blue bellbottoms covered with dirt. That smear of dirt remained from the last day of gym the day before. We wore street clothes, because we'd turned in our issues. I'd gotten a single and was on first base with another guy on second. They were slow in getting the ball to the pitcher, and the other guy struck out for third. By the time they saw him it was too late, but they threw anyway. So I took off for second. They threw again, I slid, safe. Meanwhile, the other guy went home. When they tried, again unsuccessfully, to throw him out, I took third. By this time it was pretty funny. They ended up calling him back to third and me to first; I still don't know why, but who cares? It was fun. Anyway, I was wearing these same pants, and a red wrinkled faded tee shirt. Plus I've got long (I guess by now it's longer than just plain long) sort of unkempt hair and all in all I suspected the old guy would react—you know, give me a look. People do that sometimes, you get used to it.

He didn't react. It was a long light. Ahead curled thickly leaved green trees, probably oaks or elms, can't remember, that hung over the road on both sides until the pavement curved out of view to the left six hundred yards away. Along the right, six hundred yards of unlit street lights blended into one image. A grimy overcast sky forecast thunderstorms in accordance with the weatherman. It occurred to me I saw America. I looked hard, afraid I would never see it again.

America! Right before my eyes, I thought. I tried to note all that characterized it, roads and street lights and green trees and cars and the business district I'd just passed through and the country club up ahead and the radio and the old man and the little kids and me and the lady in the car behind and the weatherman and the ghetto and disgruntled and embarrassed I recognized my stupidity.

All my life I'd tried to characterize America. I'd read writings about and heard of people searching for the average middle American, the Great American Novel, the American way, the All-American. At last I recognized the search's inevitable ignorance. At last I knew you can't nutshell America.

My last exam is tomorrow. I'm not studying much for it, because it would take an impossible 96 per cent for a semester grade of B and only 40 per cent for a C. I'm only taking the exam, of course, for the learning experience. If I wasn't going to learn from it, my counselor would give me permission not to take it. The course is introductory analysis, Math 8. Considering my math score on the American College Test was in the 98th percentile, something is wrong with either the school or me. Probably both.

I should have taken art instead.

Looking back over the school year, the rat race of it all stands out most—certainly a lot more than anything an administrator might brag about. And especially this year, my junior year, with people taking college board tests and receiving their Scores and Class Rank. People fight to get into college, into courses, out of courses, to earn positions in extra-curricular activities; and they fight each other, or over each other. I fight along with the rest, as if we didn't mind that whenever someone wins, someone else loses. Just like the damn draft lottery. But with test scores, we can't blame our friends for our failures. Watch two people fight for something only one can have, whether it's a person, position, or anything. Watch the watery eyes of the red-faced loser, and then watch the watered down humility of the red-eyed winner. The irony of it all is that we fight because we believe that if we manage to leave school successfully, we won't have to fight when we get older. We see high school as transitional, it's either to give us a degree to get a job, or to prep us for college, a higher degree and a better job. But high school isn't transitional. In ten years we'll fight the same social rat races we're fighting now. A degree does not remove the rat race from our future, and it won't remove the harm the rat race has already inflicted. If we want to stop hurting each other and discover what we want in life, we should start now, right here in Deerfield High School. I want to stand up and scream it to all my friends. But I know better.

Cruising for Burgers

Cruising for burgers used to be the expected activity for every fine, upstanding, normal high school student. After a basketball game or before a dance or just anytime on a weekend, the right thing to do was to get in your 47 Belair and torque on over to Biff's house, then go cruising. This act belonged with Dion, Chuck Berry, Buddy Holly, leather jackets, greasy hair, jalopies and dancing. Weekends really swung in the 50's. The malt shop was always hummin' with some real rock and roll at night. Girls wore pleated skirts and bobby socks and had names like Betty Sue and Dotty. Boys wore cuffed pants, a flat top with wings was the ultimate in hair style, and they had names like Touey and Action. Life began on the weekends and continued in the malt shop after school. When one of the guys wasn't hanging out on a corner or combing his hair, he had to be in his garage giving his baby a lube. The car was the highest symbol of one's masculinity, so the loudest, fastest, and keenest was the purpose for living. These were the days when there were no student uprisings about the length of hair or national anthems or mom or anything. Politics had no influence on these wonderful human beings. They were caught up in their grease and had no need or want for anything else.

Somewhere in the past 20 or so years we have lost the grease and the life style that went along with it. The present day teenager has come through a lot, though. Music has evolved from the Beach Boys to the Mothers to the Beatles and beyond. This generation is a t.v. group. We have been exposed to live coverage of assassinations, starvation, and outer space. Philosophies of all sorts are bombarding today's average student. Decisions are being thrust upon young people everywhere: concern about ecology, who is going to run the country, and what college to attend are the questions that involve students right here in Deerfield. Most of the answers today are found in apathy. That is, there is no answer. Drugs have come into the picture as a viable cop out. . . .

Cruising for burgers has gotten lost in the shuffle. For some reason the rise of intellectualism has brought about the downfall of the old rock and roll days. Today's weekends are quite different from back then. Affluence has had a lot to do with it. As the population of our country grew and the cities overcrowded, the people began to move to the suburbs. The homes grew bigger and more expensive. The suburbs grew while the cities died. And while all this was happening, the things kids did changed. No longer is shining your own car sharp, but taking your new Buick with FM radio and air conditioning to be filled up with ethel on your dad's credit is in. There are still basketball games and other school related events, but school spirit too, seems to have died along with grease. There used to be great support for a school team whether it won or lost, and then after a game, a sock hop. But no more. Dancing has given way to sitting down at a concert and just listening for $6.50. Parties make up most of the Deerfield weekend and while there is about an equal amount of beer, grass and 7-up consumed at different places and times, it's all a bore. If only people could remember the hamburger. With the increase of technology a place called the Golden Arches sells trillions of reasonable facsimiles, but how could anyone cruise there? Something must be done; too much grass, too much money, too much introspection.

Everybody should try and bring back a little life in this town. A new wave, a new consciousness that reverts back to and partakes in the old ways of having fun must evolve. We have, right here in our town, a great place for all of us to begin to rekindle the happiness and glory that all men shared in the fifties: Harry's Grill. It has enough grease to make any card carrying pinko go in there and wave a flag and whistle the Battle Hymn of the Republic. One comes out of that place with a community spirit and a hope that one day everyone will once again rise up and clean their own carburetors. Other spots in town could be rejuvenated to allow for dancing and rocking and rolling. Corners could once again be a place to hang out. Bring back the Malt Shop and the hamburger stands to cruise to. Holy Cow! Gee Whiz! Life could be neat.

A Tribute to the Courtyard

Gee, it's so nice here . . . I mean this is the one place I can be with all my buddies and maybe I could even get to know some new people since this is really the action place and I—hey, Rodney! RODNEY! Rodney? Hmmm. Well, anyway, as I was saying, all my really good pals hang out here because it's social and stuff and —Jean, over here! Over here, Jean, it's me! Um, now what was I talking about? Oh yeah, what a fantastic place to be friendly and talk to all the people I know. The atmosphere here is just so—excuse me a sec—Sid! Sid, SID! Anyway, I hardly ever talk to anyone except when I'm in the courtyard, because like I said, it's the kind of place you really get a chance to talk to everyone and you—Rita, wait up! . . .

Academics

First Steps

The American high school today is a compromise among the many individuals who wish to influence the development of adolescents. The nature of this compromise can be clearly seen when one observes educators discuss differing goals or priorities to which they would subject the youngster. Some emphasize the practical skills necessary for a person to make a living, while others want a more general intellectual or academic preparation. Many want to emphasize the world as it is, confident of their having found it, leaving others that would teach the world as it ought to be, no less confidently than their more "realistic" brethren. Still others consider the purpose of education to be that of freeing our innately humane natures from the fetters of ignorance. Their opposites might consider education to be that discipline which saves us from our essential barbarism. The compromise gets more complex when one realizes that these goals are usually stated in general terms, for which a concrete application usually separates philosophical allies. Most people, for instance, agree that freedom is desirable but in practice few can agree on its limits.

Each of the above ideas has considerable merit, but there is a general trend that I see developing at Deerfield and would like to see more strongly implemented. The goal that I believe should be stressed comes under the ambiguous term "reason". By reasoning, I mean the need for teachers and administrators to relate the educational program to the world one lives in, and to understand the nature of this relation. The objectives of each class ought to be as clearly as possible formulated with the above definition in mind, and constantly repeated. I see this relation being furthered by the use of simulations and games constructed for the purpose of objective achievement. As a final step the student might be able to gain a clearer understanding into the uncertain nature of reason itself. The purpose of any class or program is subject to question, and students should be encouraged to participate in its refinement or reformulation. This participation in objective formulation and achievement (learning by doing) can show that, as in life, reason is never absolute, but instead involves endless gradations of knowledge; a process requiring tolerance, patience and hard work. Important tasks of the world will only be solved by understanding (reason) and the nature of this understanding should be carefully studied and practiced in the high school.

Deerfield has made progress in the goal of a more reasonable education. The emphasis upon small groups, independent study, pass-fail classes in certain areas and course variety has added to the sense of participation and decision-making. More could be done, however, by allowing for flexibility of class-scheduling, greater teacher accountability for student progress, and perhaps most importantly, more time for teachers to prepare creative and precise lesson plans and evaluative devices.

The student must also be prepared to assume a role in the world as a reasoning being at the personal and social level. A certain amount of decision-making should be allowed the student, in order to give meaningful practice in choosing alternatives and (within limits) the lessons of failure. Elimination of the dress code and study halls, open corridors and the senior option are, I believe, steps in the right direction. I would like to see added to this area an open campus policy and more variety in course offerings, not only by subject but in meeting times and credit given. Socially a valuable aid in the development of a reasonable student would be more responsibility in the running of his clubs and athletic teams. The organization, plans, success and even the existence of the activity would be more dependent upon student interest and competence, while sponsors and coaches would serve the very important role of advisers or teachers, bringing their expertise to student-inspired goals and methods.

—Michael R. Knight

The Aims of Education: A Teacher's View

Great nerve is needed for a teacher to discuss the goals or aims of education. Neither student nor parent expects earth-shattering views from the classroom teacher; after all, the best minds in history have been at variance with each other on this subject. Then too, it is not the teacher but the Board of Education which is the authorized spokesman about school aims. Therefore, I will simply raise a perplexing question or two about what education is for and suggest where and how answers might possibly be found.

No one, I think—not student, parent, administrator—would disagree that there is at present a great concern about what education is for and what roles various parties do or should play in it. Evidence is everywhere: the growth of free schools, the emergence of student rights, the increasing flexibility of choices by more students about what and how and even whether they study. Many would see this concern as a sign of health, still I believe that there is much confusion at present about aims and roles in education.

A great source of this confusion has been, and continues to be, the tendency to equate education with schooling. This tendency is more widespread today than it was before the launching of the first Russian Sputnik. It is more evident in urban than rural areas; but it is most evident among those who theorize about education, especially those who spend their time telling us all what is good for us: the behavioral scientists.

The best known behavioral scientist in the United States today is probably Professor B. F. Skinner, author of Walden Two. In his latest book, he states that man does not use his freedom well; he must be conditioned by psychologically proven techniques until he becomes a cooperating member of his society. He should have no choice about whether he wants to be conditioned. What Professor Skinner is saying is that the traditional parties of parents, school, church and state have failed in their task of helping persons shape themselves. (The last four words, incidentally, are one of the more famous definitions of the aim of education.) Therefore, he says, these tasks and roles must now be delegated to a central committee. It is clear that Skinner has confused education with schooling; the welfare of the whole person, he thinks, can best be achieved by a formal and carefully controlled process.

Another recent exponent of this view is Dr. Kenneth Clark, head of the American Psychological Association. Dr. Clark says that we may no longer tolerate the freedom of politicians to make mistakes or wise decisions. We must give them drugs to curb any potentially aggressive tendencies. Dr. Clark is at one with Skinner in saying that only a certain select group should state the aims of education and see that they are carried out. Like Skinner, he betrays his lack of trust in the effectiveness of parental and school efforts to help humans become humane. Likewise, parents confuse education and schooling when they blame the schools entirely for the development of undisciplined persons. So do teachers when they blame parents for indifference and assume the role of mother and father in shaping the whole person. They, like the parents, are assuming that a school is the most important agent in guiding the growth of the young person into self-determination. That these assumptions are not true can be seen in part by some recent efforts to humanize the school while ignoring the home as a cooperating partner. This will be about as effective as surgeons have been at transplanting hearts.

If large numbers of parents, teachers, students make the equation of education and schooling, tensions are created which will be very difficult to resolve. The end product of these tensions will be the division of the partners of education into somewhat hostile camps, each jockeying with the other for positions of power and influence. In the recent past, in fact, we have seen across the country division between parents and boards of education, between teachers and boards, between students and administrations and faculties. These divisions have centered around the question: "Who has what right to do what with whom?" or, to put it another way: "Who should play what role in the process of education?"

Where does Deerfield High School fit into all this discussion? Do we have divisions among students, parents, teachers on the basic question of the aims of education? Do we have hostile camps? What are the aims of education in our school? Can we reach a greater consensus? Is it desirable to do so?

It seems to me that the easiest way to deal with these questions is simply to look at the results of the process. Let me insert first, however, the idea I have on the aims of education. If the effectiveness of the educational process depends upon the cooperation of all the responsible partners, then I think the aim of the process is the development of what, to me, is the educated person; that is, one who manifests three qualities: self-knowledge, self-discipline, and self-giving. Self-knowledge means real knowledge of one's potential, one's weaknesses, one's strengths. With self-knowledge comes proper estimation; one thinks that he is neither better nor worse than he really is. Socrates said this was the highest aim: "Know thyself." Self-discipline means being able to act in accord with one's values and then so acting! If one, for example, is enslaved by a habit that prevents him from acting as he feels he should, then he is lacking in self-discipline. Self-giving means what it says; it's what many mean when they say love is the answer to everything. It means the desire, the ability, and the habit of thinking of the welfare of others. This implies regularity, not simply that kind of giving that comes as a result of an occasional strong feeling.

Now if the four years at Deerfield High School have resulted, for a particular student, in a steady increase in these three qualities of a mature person, then one can say that, for that person, all parties have cooperated and all parties had similar aims. But what of the majority? Using the majority of DHS graduates as a yardstick, can one say they have manifested self-knowledge, self-discipline, and self-giving? Well, of course such a question is highly debatable. If one disagrees with my aims of education, then the question is irrelevant. Or, perhaps, the use of majority for a yardstick might be demanding too much. After all, how many schools, ever, "turned out" people with qualities like these?

But whether the question is answered just as it is worded or not, it is that form of question together with its answer that will determine just exactly what we believe are the aims of education and the roles each of us is to play in it. The more difficulty we have in listing just what it is that describes a person after four years of home-school-church-state inter-relationships, the more sure we can be that there is great variation in our ideas of the aims of education.

Administration

"Some administrators are less effective than others; it can't be helped."

"Don't tell me about it, I just follow the rules. Write to the Board of Education."

"Well, you can have your idealism, but you'll have to come to grips with the situation sometime."

"The administration is an incredible bunch. They belong in a Prussian army."

"Stop bothering me. I'm trying to learn."

"I think the kids are looking at the teachers to change, and the teachers are looking at the kids to change."

"All they want is to make sure there's some red tape involved."

For Shame

I am most pleased to announce the selection of eighty-seven students into the Deerfield chapter of the 1972 National Dishonor Society (NDS). The students were chosen during the Christmas Vacation. They were selected on five bases:

1) Students may not have kissed more than three teachers' feet this year;

2) Students may not have carried more than seven textbooks in school at one time, nor may they have worn slacks with button-down shirts and sweater vests, in the case of boys, or pleated skirts with a sweater and a blouse, in the case of girls;

3) Students must have objected at least once to something said by a teacher;

4) Students must have been late to school at least once this year;

5) Students must be suspected to have Communist leanings by at least two respected teachers.

NDS feels that it can be just as worthwhile as its counterpart, NHS. In fact, NDS members believe that even before the group was formed, it was as worthwhile as NHS. Furthermore, NDS members were purposely selected just as fairly as were NHS members. (Names were picked out of a hat, and people who weren't well-liked, or had bad breath, were vetoed.) I am indeed very proud of NDS. I feel that it gives needed recognition to the mediocre, honorless students at Deerfield High School. You know, the ones who did not make it into the select few. Unfortunately, the names of the 1972 National Dishonor Society members cannot be published, because we are all very, very ashamed of ourselves.

—Jim Wallace
President, 1972
NDS, DHS chapter

The Value of NHS

There is a strong feeling among both the faculty and the student body that the National Honor Society is no longer a worthwhile organization. There is a movement to either re-evaluate or completely drop Deerfield's NHS chapter. As a member of NHS, I strongly support the idea of re-evaluating NHS: What specific qualifications should its members have? What should NHS mean? What process could be a more effective way of selecting inductees?

NHS should not be a strictly academic organization. We had an honor roll to give recognition to students who achieved academically. It would be wrong to turn NHS into a new form of the honor roll. But we could put more stress on all of the ideals of NHS—namely recognition of those students for leadership, service and character as well as scholastic achievement. NHS is much more meaningful as an honor for a student's merits as a human being. It's more realistic since we are judged in the "outside" world, not by what our grade point average or class rank are, but by the type of people we are.

Improvements can and should be made in the selection system. The methods presently practiced are very poor and the teachers have nothing to judge students by. This is one of the reasons that only thirty teachers were active in the selections of this year's members. Many teachers felt that they couldn't make a fair judgment by the present methods. A petition stating this fact was signed by many of the faculty.

I propose that each student in the top third of the class, or all those with a 3.0 average, qualify to fill out a simple application for membership in NHS. This application would then include a list of the student's activities and perhaps a short essay on a subject he considers important. Thus teachers would have something concrete on which to make their decisions. Also, students who weren't interested probably wouldn't make the effort to apply for membership, and only those students who would take the honor sincerely and seriously would be chosen. Most nonmembers feel insulted because they wanted to become members of NHS, while other students don't care but they become members.

NHS can be a powerful organization. Its members have the "potential for success." The main weakness that is choking NHS is a lack of respect on the part of the student body and faculty because of its indefinite specifications for membership.

Dleifreed

The sleek monorail raced through the colorful midwest landscape one autumn morning. Inside an old man spoke in hushed tones to the conductor. Apparently frustrated, the conductor grumbled, "They're not going to like making an unscheduled stop, but I'll see what I can do. I can't understand why anyone would want to go to that town anyway." The old man turned and resumed looking out the window at the scenery flashing by. The conductor returned and assured the man that they would make the stop, arriving there in about ten minutes. The old man smiled and, staring out the window, his thoughts carried him back to his childhood. It had been almost 50 years since he had seen the town. Closing his eyes, he pictured the house he grew up in, the house his father had worked so hard to afford. He remembered the business district, rapidly expanding and dotted with real estate agencies. He remembered the park near town and his church just down the road.

The high-pitched whine of the monorail lowered and the old man opened his eyes to see the scenery moving by the window less quickly. He rose from his seat and walked slowly to the door. The monorail pulled smoothly to a stop and the doors slid open. Thanking the conductor, the man stepped out onto the platform and stared at the old, broken-down station with its boarded-up windows. He sensed the monorail slide away quickly behind him. Noticing that there were no cars in the parking lot, he turned around and gazed out over the large park across from the station. It, too, was empty, devoid of the laughter and shouting of children. Almost by instinct, he began to walk towards the park, trying to absorb everything around him. Crabgrass grew on the infields of the baseball diamonds, the swing-sets were toppled and rusted. He walked up a slight incline to the now empty parking lot behind the police station and library. All of the buildings were closed and boarded up. He remembered the pride the town took in their new library so many years ago. Now it appeared to be only a building that housed no books and served no people.

Awe-struck by everything he saw, the old man started slowly walking away from town down the main road. He carefully scanned the run-down two-floor apartment buildings lining the road for some form of life. He heard only the light wind rustling through the trees and the crackle of the fallen leaves under his feet. Soon he came upon his old church. Its stained-glass windows were broken, for it had also been destroyed by years of inactivity.

He continued walking down the road, observing the dilapidated houses around him. His mind raced to try and find reasons for what he saw. How could such an active town, given birth to and fed by the large city to its south, die so quickly? He wasn't sure whether it was the cold wind or his thoughts which chilled him. He shoved his hands down deep into his coat pockets and walked on.

Finally, he came upon the fringes of the town. He stopped and looked painfully across yet another empty parking lot in front of the large red brick high school. He approached the school and, finding a door open, walked inside. The tiles on the floor were loosening and the brick walls were filled with spray-painted obscenities. As he walked through the empty halls, lined with lockers now rusted and lockless, he thought about all the exciting days he had spent here. He walked through the courtyard, overgrown with weeds and grass, then back inside again. He peered into the school library; dirt had replaced the books on its shelves. He continued through the maze of hallways.

As he turned a corner, he noticed that a door to one of the classrooms was open. The old man entered and looked around. The room was strewn with old, rusted typewriters and file cabinets. He heard a sound from the corner behind him and, turning, he saw a man standing there staring at him. The stranger was dressed in a tattered security guard uniform. He was ill-shaven and the wrinkles on his face reflected his long years of service.

"Looking for something?" the guard questioned.

"No, not really. I'm just looking around. I used to go to school here."

"Oh . . . well, it sure is a dump now, isn't it?"

"Yeah. It seems like the whole town fell apart. I wonder how it happened?"

"Apathy killed it."

"What?"

"Apathy killed it, and it all started here."

"What do you mean?"

"It's simple. The kids here got to the point where they didn't care whether they got an education or not. They didn't care what happened to themselves or anyone else. The quality of education naturally decreased, and since this was one of those towns where people were always moving in and out, it reached the point where nobody moved in because of the poor school reputation. Slowly just about everybody moved away, and now the place is empty."

"That's hard to believe. This place had so much to offer."

"Maybe that was the problem; the kids had so much they couldn't appreciate how good it was."

"Yeah, maybe. What are you doing in here?"

"I'm hired to keep people out of the building."

"Oh . . ." The old man walked out of the room and down the halls. He stopped and looked through the musty glass of the vivarium. Its pond was now dry and its plants withered. All that remained were empty cages. He found his way out into the autumn sunlight and treaded towards the football field.

He reached the field and climbed to the top of the stands. He sat down and stared over the netless tennis courts and the long uncut grass of the football field. Suddenly the field became alive. Players were battling, confetti was flying, the crowd around him roaring — his daydreaming ended abruptly as the sound of a monorail whirred by behind him. "Apathy," the old man muttered bitterly. Tears came to his eyes.

"If we're going to debate about who's starting the meeting, we'll never get it started."

"Debate could help you in all varieties of jobs for the future, because most people are judged by how well they speak."

"Sometimes I think it's talking as long as I can without taking a breath."

"No, you don't have to have a big mouth to be in debate."

Forensics

"There isn't exactly an overabundance of Forensics members that bake."

"Judge 32 hates Neil Simon and takes off points for shuffling your feet."

"If I can't win I don't want to participate."

"When they call your name can I get your trophy for you?"

"This is the sixth meet in a row they served dead fried chicken."

FORENSICS: Jan Zarish, captain; Peter Robbins, treasurer; Jennie Small, secretary; Betsy Raymond, assistant captain.

Drama

"Do a reading of a potato chip bag?"

"It's sort of an ambitious improvisational play that we're attempting."

"All the directors end up walking on the desks."

"Sometimes we make scenes."

Dance

"I'm here because I love to dance."

"O.K. When I give the signal, turn around and look like a fire hydrant."

"We always count in eights."

"She put in some feuillés, and all this other junk."

"What are we doing? Oh, we're not doing that anymore."

"You know what I'm doing? I'm going up, then I'm going down."

FTA

"Make it a valuable experience for those interested in education."

"We practice taught in first grade—observed classes, talked to teachers."

"All I did was play that tic-tac-toe game!"

"People are unaware of the values of the club, but I'm sure it's valuable for some people."

DECA

"It's like a field trip every day."

"I'm gonna go into business right after school, and this gave me the chance to have the experience and school at the same time."

"Sorry—he's not at school, he's working today."

"You set up your goals and work up to standards you make yourself."

"Who gets the cream off the top of your salaries?"

OO

"You get credit and money for the job."

"In the classroom you do what you yourself need, there's no textbook."

"I can play 'Twinkle Twinkle Little Star' on my typewriter."

"In our class we do money-making things—like bowling or roller-skating."

AFS

"I'm sick of hearing, 'Well, how do you like America?'"

"Nobody is gonna stick a tag on me!"

"We sell cookies and coke for whatever meager profit we can get."

"Is this an official party or a for fun party?"

"With more money we can bring more students here—or send more away."

"Nobody talks about getting along with their families."

"You missed the day we flamed the crêpes on the overhead projector."

"They've got a cause, we just have fun."

"We haven't done anything but eat, really."

"Sure we speak French, a little."

"We all kind of talk about German things that interest us, like Germany's role in the war."

"Don't talk English!"

"Wir gehen zu Lutzer Nicht War!"

GERMAN: Renate Basting, secretary-treasurer; Roy Ozols, president.

Wireless

"Yeah, they're all hams."

"Mr. Huntsinger called British Honduras to find out how the banana crop was doing."

"We know this dentist in Germany who's got this German shepard."

"We were sending code and got contact with a guy in Cuba and all of a sudden he disappeared!"

Camera

"You look at what a photographer is trying to say."

"You have to know the rules before you go against them."

"You're very seldom aware of excellent quality, but when it's poor quality you really notice it."

Chess

"I'll give you a draw."

"Aaah—you gave me the double jump."

"That's the dumbest opening I ever saw."

"He didn't make any really out-of-the-ordinary extra-special super moves."

"Have you won at first board?
Have you won at second board?
Have you won at third board? I have."

A Cappella

"I don't know what it is, but it sounds impressive."

"We sing the things you can't use all of A Cappella for."

"How do you start this one again?"

"We sang for Hans' Bavarian
Lodge and they gave us a free meal. . . Sara Lee did, too."

"What's that Christmas carol we sang a thousand times?"

"Sometimes the wrong notes are sung."

"How about ming-mong-ming-mong-ming?"

"Altos never have any problems."

"Why don't we sing 'Teen Angel'?"

"Cool it off!"

"You've got the dynamics right, but on the second score break after the quiver."

"We sang at the Civic Opera House, and got a standing ovation from two janitors."

"It's a break from the pressure of playing with a team."

"All we high jumpers do is lie in the pit and get sun-tanned. The runners? That's a different story."

"I run to accomplish something."

"It's a sport where you have it or you don't, no excuses."

"You put in a lot of work and you feel really good about it."

"When I'm losing, I think about it every inch of the way."

Bruce Borland

Girls' Sports

"Just like struggling to get freedom of speech, we finally got the girls' sports program."

"Field hockey...competitive swim... badminton...volleyball...softball... tennis."

"You just go to practice and play matches against each other."

"We want to give girls a chance to be challenged."

"You don't play it in gym like you do in sports."

"They raised the nets—I can't get the ball over when they're that high."

"Right now, we're still limited."

"If you play other schools, is it called extramurals?"

Boys' Intramurals

I started playing soccer the second week of the season. They pushed me onto the field, explained a few rules and ordered me to play left wing. That began my experience with soccer—practice, which was held every afternoon from 3:30 to 5:30. It was great fun, even if the varsity football team did practice on the field next to us. We'd do one or two exercises, kick the ball around, then play a game. There was little organization, and the rules were few: no short hair necessary, no keeping early hours or having to show up for practice every day. All we had to do was play and win.

The games were the best part—although they might have been even better if I'd played more often. Friday afternoon we'd load our equipment onto the bus waiting in the front circle, and ride over to the opposing team's home ground. We always had away games because DHS hasn't gotten around to putting in any soccer goals. Our coaches were great—since no one really knows how to coach soccer, they supplied us with equipment and transportation, then left us pretty much alone. One real advantage to the team was our teammate who had lived in Peru for 11 years. Since soccer is the most popular sport there, he would tell us how to practice, how to play and how to win. Our team director didn't do much besides yell "Pass the ball!" But we didn't do badly for a first year team lacking guidance. We held a 6 wins - 1 tie - 1 loss record, with a few dislocated knees, a broken collarbone, and lots of bruised and bashed shins, not bad for a non-contact sport.

As a member of the first soccer team at DHS, I can only say I hope the interest in soccer doesn't die out. Although soccer is the number one sport in countries all over the world, it is just now—finally—catching on in the United States. Deerfield was one of the last schools in the conference to set up a team, but it should recruit a good one next year, too. Soccer is a sport demanding great skill and coordination. This year the team was a success; it was fun. However, the main reason soccer was so enjoyable was because we were so great.

Over the quiet Deerfield community, night has arrived. It is cold, so cold in fact, that there is ice at Jewett Park, Deerfield's famous recreational facility. On that slick surface uniformed skaters move up and down. In their hands are long sticks with a curve at the end. Someone once told me they use them to hit a puck into a net. It seems right now, observing the action, that this is perhaps only secondary. In one corner of the rink, I discern two youths pushing and poking at one another. At center, two boys skate in a direction directly opposite to that of the puck which is sliding for a different corner.

"So what, do ya wanna make something of it!" Boy, was I surprised, I thought athletes were all so clean cut—that's the last time I try to talk to one of them. In any case, in this cold Deerfield community something is happening for them, this Monday night. For eighty players participating in the Intramural Hockey Program, some nights aren't so boring.

"Look, we're winning by a goal. I can't talk to you now, go away."

That's it! That's my last question for sure for this evening.

Now the puck is sliding down the other direction. It is being followed diligently by a host of players—more so at this moment because there's only a few seconds left.

Off the ice, Coach raises his whistle and counts down the final few seconds. 5 - 4 - 3 - 1 - twee.

"Hooray,"

"That a boy, gumper."

"Good show."

"Great game."

"Boo!"

"Come on Coach, the clock's fast."

"Luck—that's 90% of the game anyway."

The action has stopped and both sides head for the warming house.

"Hey guys, wait a minute. Do ya wanna play some more—the ice is free?"

"Sure, it isn't that cold anyway."

"Let's play."

Jeff Matheson

First of all, intramurals is not sport. It is love. And hate. It is ecstasy. Instantly. Of course, ecstasy wouldn't be worth much more than a midget volleyball player if there wasn't sorrow. In intramurals, there is plenty of sorrow. Intramurals, my friend, is life.

There are many sports in intramurals—soccer, bowling, football and others. Any basketball player will set the record straight, though. Basketball is the intramural sport. (We have our pride.)

Any basketball player will tell you that there are many bad referees in intramurals. All of them.

But why describe such common deficiencies as refs when you all know that? What needs to be said is that Werth's team beat a team of Reizen, Kier, Lattanzi, Siegel, Johnson, Melchiorre and Koopman because the latter was minus their star gunner Epstein. And Werth lost to Hauck because Schumann and Miller preferred a crummy varsity baseball meeting instead of a manly, exciting, tough game of playoff basketball.

Needless to say, Reizen, Kier, Melchiorre and the others lost to Hauck in the championship game because of an absurd free throw rule (each worth a basket) and refs to match.

But bitterness in intramurals is short-lived. There is a saying that circulates among intramural members. "50 per cent of the pleasure is getting up for a game, 49 per cent is coming down and celebrating afterwards, 1 per cent is the mediocre game itself where nobody ever gave me the damn ball."

Seriously, us veterans of intramural war can never explain to the public what it means to get a slap on the back, a cheery word, or a knee in the groin. Sometimes I think we're all a bunch of misunderstood humanitarians born in a wrong era. Why else would people laugh when we fight on the court? Why don't people wistfully nod their heads in approval when two teammates with growing Afros give each other some skin?

Despite increasing fan apathy, despite the lack of monetary stimulant, and despite the fact that your average intramural player is an altogether vanishing animal, I have never come across a participant who quit the circuit in dissatisfaction. The cause of this lack of dissatisfaction stems from the root of the matter. The roots of basketball, for instance, are fuzzy peach baskets on asphalt playgrounds with normal sized humans. I speak for my fellow combattants when I say, "I associate and relate to this."

So public, do you understand our motivations a little better? Do you comprehend the dignity, pride and sensuality that is behind a driving lay-up or a booming slap-shot? If not, I wouldn't worry about it. We don't really understand you either.....

'Till Earth And Sky

He flipped his scarf over his shoulder and settled his chin into the warm yarn. The air was unusually chilly that night, but it did not bother him. It refreshed him. He liked these lone walks. They gave him a chance to think.

The night sky was like crystal. Though each star shown with its own singular, spartan brilliance, it was solitary Orion that fascinated him most. How boldly Orion stood, how fiercely, proudly alone against the winter sky, yet how much at peace with all the heavens. The irony of the stars intrigued him. As he watched with a reverent awe, he felt a strange heat radiate from each of Orion's points, not inviting as the gentle glow of the sun, but still with a unique attraction to him. He put his head down again and walked on down the street. He wondered. Had he really changed?

The fog hanging low to the ground became thicker, until soon he could see no more than a few yards ahead. There was something in him that hated fog, now. He wanted to turn back, but he couldn't, though he did not know why. A vagueness called to him from the darkness. Unsure, he hesitated and listened. It was the silent song of the night that beckoned, but the song was incomplete. An essential note seemed to be missing. He could not leave yet. He went on, lost in the fog.

His feet had taken him into the open field of a playground. Then, he heard it. Perched on a solitary tree, a lone bird pierced the darkness with its call. It was a solid, perfect tone, one eternal note, existing alone, suspended, free, yet full and complete. The sound repeated again and again in his mind. This was the note. It touched something deep within him, something almost deeper than his ability to recognize it, the long sought presently unexpected truth. No, he hadn't changed, but he had grown. Orion, the bird—things were becoming clear.

The library was quiet. He was sitting alone in one of the carrels far in the back, as was his habit, reading a textbook, diligently absorbing meaningless syllables on blank pages, steadfastly following a road to nowhere. He spent all of his free time in the library. Of course, he would have wanted more, but he was afraid, afraid of disappointing and of being disappointed, so he ventured nothing outside himself. He wanted to reach to someone, he had to, but his hands merely rested in his pockets, the most detestable of all poses. So, he hid in the library.

He smiled, now, when he thought of that first year, his sophomore year, at a new high school, not because it had been enjoyable, but because it was over. He had earned excellent grades and had failed himself. Withdrawn so deeply into himself, he had become unreachable, like a continual stranger even to himself. He pretended nothing was wrong, that loneliness was only his natural way of living, but he couldn't really fool himself. He had become well acquainted with intellect, and a stranger to truth.

It was quiet. Again he was sitting alone, no longer in the library, but in the office of his school's anti-pollution organization. He was studying the files, preparing his address. His manner was different, now, it had a purposefulness about it. He had committed himself to something outside his own existence and, thus, gained his first measure of wisdom. He had a cause. Still, something was missing. Data has no feeling. He was still an island. He glanced up from his work, looked about the empty room, and sank down into the chair.

Junior year had been a step forward, he thought. As he walked, he noticed the fog beginning to break up a little.

Noise was everywhere. People were talking, laughing, shouting, arguing, and running about for no purpose other than the pure joy of foolishness. He sat in front of the long table in the publications office, musing over something or other he had just picked up. There were people all around, his friends. Beside him sat the girl he loved. Yes, he could even love. As he glanced from person to person, he realized what had been missing all along. Here was the truth. He knew now why Jesus had been a man and walked among men. How wrong the religious were. Heaven, he knew, was not a far beyond, but a reality of the world. It existed in the hearts of others. He had been away a long time.

He had not noticed how much faster his pace had become. The lone bird called again. He now understood the irony of Orion. He had not found his place, as Orion had, in the world, his heaven, but he knew he could find it. He had found the necessary peace. It rested in the fine distinction between loneliness and solitude, for him the difference between hell and heaven, the universal oneness that can be achieved only through love. He could be alone now, it was natural, but no longer in exile. Again he heard the call of the lone bird. He had come a long way. The fog was lifting.

End; Point of Beginning

It is almost four years ago that our worlds became one. Soon again we will separate and go our ways, each of us bearing the wares of our times together. What is it that we have learned? You have taught me your how-to games and your assorted set of rules; a variety of impersonal requirements of my friends and me. You have taught me that it is most usually "what to study" that counts rather than "how to study." I have taken many empty tests and have received many valueless grades. You have led me to meet finite expectations of my education instead of seeking knowledge for the gifts it alone bears. But somehow, in the midst of this commotion, people stopped to exchange smiles and gifts of love. It is time that I thank you for providing a place for my friends and me to cultivate each other, to grow and share and learn with one another. Yes, there have been smatterings of good educational experiences, all with gratitude due to strong teachers who decided to manage with a variety of "hassles" from all directions. Now turn to you. What have we left you? Will you remember my friends and me tomorrow? Next year? Will you smile upon thoughts of our pranks? Our games? Our cares? Our thoughts? Or are we but another batch of processed scholars? Whatever your memories may be I wish to add one more. I have learned, in our time together, that teaching is a communicating art and I wish to leave you with one last gift of knowledge recently given to me. If Ashley Montague is correct in saying that the purpose of education is "to teach the love of humanity" then you are failing. Once again the cry of "relevance...change" echoes. Today nearly all the factual knowledge yet acquired is within our grasp. It is now time to learn to relate my learnings to living so that as we separate to meet the fabled "real world" each of us will be more able to understand ourselves, and to love a variety of others.

—pam frishman

Deerfield High School was a place where, somehow, I spent four years. That seems impossible to believe now. I feel as if I've never done anything but gone to Deerfield, and yet at the same time the four years seemed incredibly short. Freshman, sophomore, junior and now senior years have gone by, and it seems like no time has passed. Still, I can imagine myself in no other context but Deerfield—I don't remember what I was like before I came here, and I can't imagine myself beyond here. Deerfield took me, changed me, and now is done with me, and it all happened without my knowing it. Only now, when I'm forced to look at my leaving, can I begin to sort out what this place was, and is, to me.

It wasn't "school spirit." In my entire time here, I went to a half dozen football games, and one basketball game, and I can't remember whether or not "we" won any of them. Marching bands, red and grey, homecomings and the like all left me cold. If that interested other people, fine; for me, that didn't represent Deerfield. My attachment to Deerfield isn't a won-lost record or a spirit jug.

Deerfield was, partially, my classes. It provided a fantastic intellectual opportunity of which, sometimes, I took advantage. The teachers I had here were tremendous—sincere, concerned, interested human beings. I feel extremely lucky to have had these people that were genuinely interested in me as a student and person. Their patience and knowledge taught me a lot. I was challenged, and I'm very grateful for that.

But, above everything else, Deerfield was people. Nothing else I did would have mattered if I hadn't learned something about people. I could have faced all my courses, been in every activity and group possible, and still come out the most ignorant person here if I hadn't learned something about people. That is all Deerfield, or any school, is really about—learning to live and share with other people. High school meant gradually coming out of my shell, and realizing that the only way to live is to build bridges instead of walls.

Looking back, I realize I've come to accept the idea that people are like sunsets. When you see a sunset, you don't say, "That's nice, but it would be better if there were a little more pink on the left, a little less blue in the middle. . . ." You accept it as it is. Each sunset is uniquely beautiful, it can't be improved or copied. So it is with people. It is ridiculous to compare any given sunset to some "ideal" sunset, no such thing exists. It is equally ridiculous to compare people to some ideal. Some sunsets have more purple tones than yellow, just as some people have some talents that others don't, but that doesn't decrease the beauty of either. People and sunsets can't be judged on relative merit. Sunsets, are, admittedly, bittersweet experiences, as are people, but without sunsets we couldn't enjoy the beauty of stars or sunrises.

Deerfield, then, was people; people that touched me and thus shaped me. For four years it has been my world, and I'm a little frightened now that I'm leaving it. But, because of the beauty of all the sunsets I've seen so far, I'm confident of the beauty of all the sunsets I'm going to see.

DEERFIELD PEACE LOVE & CHARITY

We of the yearbook staff would like to express our thanks to: Bruce Stupple, Ray Knudson, Michelle Lapointe, Bob Nace, Gary Rozak, Jeff Sengstack, Sue Bordonaro, Gregg Temkin, Big Bob Moorehead, Miss Taylor Talk, John Braunger and all those people who contributed quotations and essays. A special thanks to Jim Shayman for almost all of the photographs in the book. We hope the opinions expressed in this book reflect a cross-section of attitudes at DHS. They are not necessarily the opinions of the yearbook staff or of District 113.

Faint, illegible handwriting, possibly bleed-through from the reverse side of the page.

The first part of the document discusses the importance of maintaining accurate records of all transactions. It emphasizes that every entry, no matter how small, should be recorded to ensure the integrity of the financial data. This includes not only sales and purchases but also expenses and income. The document provides a detailed list of items that should be tracked, such as inventory levels, customer orders, and supplier payments. It also outlines the procedures for recording these transactions, including the use of specific forms and the assignment of responsibilities to different staff members.

The second part of the document focuses on the analysis of the recorded data. It describes various methods for identifying trends and anomalies in the financial performance. This includes comparing current data with historical trends, analyzing seasonal fluctuations, and identifying areas where costs are higher than expected. The document also discusses the importance of regular reviews and reports to management, providing a clear and concise summary of the financial situation. It includes a sample report format and a checklist of items to be included in these reports.

The final part of the document addresses the overall financial health of the organization. It discusses the impact of the recorded data on key financial indicators such as profit margins, cash flow, and return on investment. It provides a framework for evaluating the organization's performance against its financial goals and for identifying areas for improvement. The document concludes with a series of recommendations for enhancing the financial management process, including the implementation of new technologies and the training of staff members.
